There is no doubt that you are a man of God and I am happy to say that at last you have arrived at the place where God always wanted you to be, like “I told you so” many years ago. Praise the Lord.

Dear Ken,

Your website is awesome and your book “When The Walls Came Down” says it all. As you know my favourite poem is “A Schizophrenic Letter,” and I will continue to read it and send it to any one and every one.

When my own son was so very ill, I prayed to God to take him and relieve his suffering, well God didn’t take him, not in the way I wanted, but today he is safe and he is getting the treatment he so deperately needs.

Just when I thought my life was over, the Lord sent you to us, and you have kept me alive and brought the Lord back into my life.

Love to both you and Doris,
Colleen, N.S.W.

NB. The significance of the statement above can only be fully appreciated by understanding what the Kosowicz family suffered as a direct result of the corruption, breakdown, and destruction, of what was once a well-functioning Mental Health Care system. The account of what they, and thousands like them have endured, can be discovered in the book mentioned above. K.P.

Very good presentation Ken, and an excellent letter from Colleen. May the Lord bless the book “When The Walls Came Down.” Perhaps it is time for someone to build the walls back up again like Nehemiah did. The mentally ill need a convalescent-style home like Morisset used to be when my late sister Sally Smallcombe was the Matron and patients had more than an existence of being locked up and drugged, they had rules and submission to authority, and jobs of work to occupy themselves and keep them on the level and the feeling of being needed and an asset in society instead of a problem to society. Their jobs of work also served as some form of productivity for their rehabilitation and confinement in a caring corrective institution with proper medical and psychiatric care and also spiritual care by caring Christian staff who took them out to Church on a Sunday and played a guitar and had them singing Gospel Hymns and songs and lead them to God through prayer.
